You've heard of traditional preaching, postmodern preaching, seeker-targeted preaching, discipleship-focused preaching. But in this age of tolerance, how do we make sure our message is getting through?

Welcome to Subversive Preaching — a style of preaching that's never been more necessary than in this day and age. Because in preaching, it's not about tolerance ... it's about respect.

A panel of pastors will help you discover how:

- To reclaim the poetic, prophetic preaching voice
- Biblical culture can speak to today's culture
- To connect to younger listeners by asking the right questions
- To teach better by following the rabbis and observing their teaching style
- By using things to change people, people will then begin to change things

Renew your passion for great storytelling, and the impact that the stories of the Bible can have on this culture as you discover the heart behind Subversive Preaching.

Who Should Attend:

- Senior Pastors
- Teaching Pastors
- Next-Gen Pastors
- Youth Pastors

Rob Bell is the founding and teaching pastor at Mars Hill Bible Church in Grandville, Michigan. A gifted communicator, he shares visual stories via Nooma, 10-minute DVDs that help teach a biblical principle in a practical way to a culturally aware audience.

Marshall Shelley is the editor of Leadership Journal, and a Vice President of its parent company, Christianity Today, Inc.

Mike Breaux became the newest Teaching Pastor at Willow Creek Community Church on September 1, 2003.. For the past 15 years he's been doing what he calls, "Youth ministry for big people."
